
EDITORS' FOREWORD

The editors of the Boston University Law Review dedicate this issue to the students and faculty who make our work possible. We are humbled by your support, scholarship, and commitment to shaping both the law and those who will practice it.

The justification of this “Law Review” is that it will seek to draw together for the best purposes of the State that large number of men, and, in later years, women, who have gone forth from Boston University School of Law. It will thus try to promote the ideals of service for which the School has stood, and a comprehension and understanding of those fundamentals, without which the Law will fail in its chief aim—the welfare of Society, disseminated, not only within its own ranks, but throughout the profession and community at large.

—Melville M. Bigelow, Foreword, 1 B.U. L. REV. 3, 5 (1921).

Joseph E. Bacchi
Editor-in-Chief
Boston University Law Review

Christopher L. Hamilton
Managing Editor
Boston University Law Review